Death note netflix live action cast

Take a trip down memory lane that'll make you feel nostalgia AF In case you haven't heard, Netflix picked up the rights to a live-action movie adaptation of the favored anime and manga series Death Note. Quite a few companies wanted their hand in this adaptation including Warner Bros and Lionsgate but Netflix sealed the deal and it would be insufficient to say we're excited. Check out their picks for cast members from Light to Ryuk here! To be played by Nat Wolfe To be played by Straight Outta Compton's Keith Stanfield Margaret Qualley will play Mia Sutton To be played by Paul Nakauchi To be played by Shea Whigham Perfectly cast to do the voice of Ryuk. Sources close to the project told the publication that Netflix is working on bringing the game and anime series to life on their platform, potentially in a similar style to Pokémon's first live-action venture Detective Pikachu in 2019. As the streaming giant has yet to comment on the news, there's not much info about in terms of what exactly the series will focus on or its cast. But according to Variety, sources say that Lucifer's Joe Henderson is attached to write and executive produce the series. Henderson is currently preparing to air Lucifer's final season in September 2021. Pokémon has made quite the home on Netflix as of late, with the original anime series Pokémon: Indigo League and the more recent instalments Sun & Moon Ultra Legends and Journeys available to watch on the platform. Three movies from the franchise are also available to watch, including the CGI remake of Pokémon: The First Movie in 2019 which was distributed worldwide by the streaming platform. Netflix currently has a slew of live-action anime adaptations under its belt, including a rework of the '90s classic Cowboy Bebop with the likes of John Cho, Mustafa Shakir, and Daniella Pineda starring in the series. So whether Netflix decides to do a direct live-action adaptation of the first series as they're doing with Cowboy Bebop or start completely from scratch, it's clear that this series has the potential to be a huge hit. Soon after the first trailer dropped for the upcoming Netflix original Death Note, the streaming service found itself embroiled in a brand new whitewashing controversy. Fans of the original animated version decried the choice to cast Nat Wolff, a white man, in the traditionally Japanese role of Light Yagami, with some going so far as to boycott the production outright. But despite its negative reception, many are still thrilled about the casting choices and are excited to see the live-action adaptation of the hit Japanese manga.Here's a breakdown of Death Note's main characters and the actors who will be playing their roles.Nat Wolff as Light TurnerNatt Wolff, known for his roles as Quentin in Paper Towns and Isaac in The Fault in our Stars, will star as Death Note's main protagonist Light Turner, originally known as Light Yagami in the Japanese manga version. Light's world suddenly changes after he finds the Death Note — a notebook possessing the power to kill anyone whose name is written within its pages. An intellectual, Light imagines a world without crime and plans to use the Death Note to carry out good. However, he quickly descends into his role of Kira and becomes callous, displaying an increasing disregard for the lives of others.Lakeith Stanfield as LLakeith Stanfield, who recently played Andrew Logan King in Get Out and who has a recurring role as Darius in Atlanta, is set to star as Death Note's solitary and quirky detective L. L suspects Light is the same person as Kira, and dedicates himself to apprehending the dangerous wielder of the Death Note.Willem Dafoe as the voice of RyukWillem Dafoe has used his distinct voice in movies like Finding Nemo, Finding Dory and Fantastic Mr. Fox, and now the famed actor will be bringing his vocal talents to Death Note as the voice of Ryuk.Ryuk is the bored Shinigami who drops the Death Note to Earth, thus setting into motion Light's journey towards becoming Kira. Paul Nakauchi as WatariPaul Nakauchi, a longtime voice actor in myriad video games like Overwatch, Diablo 3 and World of Warcraft, is set to star as Death Note's Watari — a famous inventor and proficient marksman with extensive training in espionage. Watari is also L's personal assistant, and the only one who can contact the reclusive detective directly.Margaret Qualley as Mia SuttonMargaret Qualley, known for her roles as Jill Garvey in The Leftovers and Amelia Kuttner in The Nice Guys, plays Mia Sutton, originally known as Misa Amane in the Japanese manga version.Mia is a bubbly and popular girl who makes her living by singing, acting and modeling. She becomes completely devoted to Light after he kills her parents' murderer. Mic has ongoing Netflix coverage. Please follow our main Netflix hub here. It was announced on April 27, 2015 that Wingard would direct the film.[10] Along with the main cast, Wingard attended a Netflix panel at San Diego Comic Con in 2017 to promote the film. Explaining what drew him to the material, Wingard said: "It was an opportunity to take something that had a great premise and breath life into it. In terms of what happens is so outlandish: the power to kill everything by writing their name in a book. There were cool themes here and embedded in that was good and evil." [11] Following the release of the film and negative reviews, Wingard deleted his Twitter account. His official reason was that he needed to focus on his next project.[12] but many news articles pointed out that the deletion followed the negative fan response regarding Death Note.[13][14] Relevant articles Interview: How Netflix's Death Note Alters the Original Story With Its American Setting, IGN, June 29, 2017.
